This book looks at the violent shifts of political authority through history and what might be done to change this pattern in the future. It examines the historical cycles observed by Gianbattista Vico, in which political authority shifts from non-existent (barbarism) to religious authority to military authority to people (democracy) and back to barbarism. According to European history, each shift produced mass violence of historical scale. The shift from religious to military authorities produced the Thirty Years War, and the shift from the military authority to democracy produced World Wars I and II. From this viewpoint, the contemporary world faces triple challenges. In addition to the democratization of China, the Islamic world is now going through the transition from religious to military authorities. And Western civilization is in the process of democratic decay. The fact that these three processes are proceeding simultaneously presents an enormous challenge. Each by itself can be very difficult to deal with. But if they were linked, it could devastate the entire world, which must be prevented at any cost. It proposes the first step toward the prevention of such devastation. It takes an approach encompassing philosophy, religion, science, art and history in order to address these challenges. It counters the prevailing trend toward specialization in academia and argues instead for the training of metaphysical engineers who would have the expertise needed to work toward a peaceful future. As the first step to set up the field of metaphysical engineering, this book begins with the field survey of physical engineering, copying its structure as much as possible. Then, it observes two major differences: metaphysical engineering s much larger size and no separation between object and subject. It...
