Invitation borrowed from Henry David Thoreau So we go about indefatigably, chanting our stanza of the lay, and awaiting the response of a kindred soul out of the distance. Limitation from Ishikawa Takiboku A poem should be a strict report of events taking place in one s emotional life - a straightforward diary. This means it has to be fragmentary. Description by Walt Whitman: I saw in Louisiana a live-oak growing, All alone stood it, and the moss hung down from the branches [.]. But I wonder d how it could utter joyous leaves standing alone there . . . Postscript by Simone Weil: The Recognition of God and Man. Electra encounters a young man in the cemetery where her father, the king, is buried after his assassination. It is her brother, the son of the king although she does not recognize him. If these verses are read without thinking of the story of Electra and Orestes, the mystical resonance is obvious (hear it from no other voice - never again to part). If after that the story as it appears in Sophocles is thought of, the evidence becomes greater. It is a matter of recognition, a frequent theme in folklore. One believes to have before oneself a stranger and it is the most beloved. This is what took place between Mary Magdalene and a certain gardener. Electra is the daughter of a powerful king, but reduced to the most miserable state of slavery on the orders of those who have betrayed her father. She is hungry. She is in rags. Affliction not only oppresses her but degrades and embitters her. But she does not give in. She hates these enemies...
